

Nicole Croy

Midwest-based photographer Nicole Croy strives to integrate art and creativity into every part of her daily life. She is an established photography educator at Carroll High School in Fort Wayne, Indiana and a Professor at Grace College. Some of her most notable achievements are receiving the Northwest Allen County School District's, "Teacher of the Year" in 2016. She received the Indiana Teacher Lily Creativity Grant for her "You Wanna Build a What?" project, in which she converted a full-sized truck into a camera obscura on wheels. She is currently an AP Reader for the College Board of Education and has presented at the National Society of Photographic Education on numerous occasions. In addition, she was a guest writer for the Photography in Focus Textbook produced by Davis Publication. She has continued her education with workshops at Penumbra Foundation, Harvard, AEAI, and National Art Education Association (NAEA) conventions.
